Quick Comment:

The historic setting of Abbotsford would be irreparably damaged if this housing development was to go ahead. As a house of great historic significance, being the first example of a house in the Baronial Revival style to draw on archaeologically correct details taken from Scottish castles and the country's vernacular tradition, its setting surely warrants greater care.

This proposal threatens the integrity of the house and would destroy the important relationship between the house and its historic setting. It is an inappropriate proposal which would destroy historic views from the house as well as from the banks of the River Tweed. It should therefore be thrown out without delay.
